United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Majority Leader McConnell, Minority Leader Schumer, Senator Wicker and Senator Cantwell,

We, the undersigned 373 organizations from across the nation, write to urge you to include prison phone justice in the next stimulus package. In a moment of triple crises—a global pandemic, economic disaster, and racial injustice—you must ensure that families are able to stay connected with incarcerated loved ones.

The COVID-19 outbreak has overwhelmed many public systems, and the correctional system is no different. Prisons and jails have become breeding grounds for infection with people crowded into tight quarters, forced to share cells and showers, and denied necessary hygiene products. But in addition to the grave risk of infection that can only effectively be addressed by depopulating prisons, incarcerated people now face isolation from their families.

The ability to connect with loved ones is critical, especially as the need to check in on one another's health and well-being is at an all-time high and prison and jail visits remain suspended in many facilities. However, COVID-19 is highlighting and amplifying the tragic reality that incarcerated people and their families have been living with for decades: predatory prison and jail communication rates.

Even absent the recent crises, families struggle to stay connected with incarcerated loved ones due to the high rates charged by prison telecom corporations for phone calls, video calls, and emails. Prison telecom corporations charge as much as $25 for a 15-minute local call,¹ consistently forcing families to decide between paying for rent or a call with their loved one behind bars. Nearly one third of families with incarcerated loved ones go into debt trying to stay connected, and 87% of those bearing the burden of these costs are women, and women of color in particular.² But the current crises have further exacerbated the burden of these high rates.

Today families with incarcerated loved ones, like millions of others, are struggling to stay afloat financially. They face delayed pay, job loss, unexpected elder and childcare, and, in the worst cases, their own illness. Many also include essential workers in hospitals, transportation, grocery stores, and sanitation. They should not need to worry about whether they can afford to be in contact with loved ones, neither should the one in 28 children with a parent behind bars.³

Moreover, continuing to allow this predation will lead to serious public health consequences. Incarcerated people and their families who are unable to afford communication are suffering from stress and despair,⁴ which have been shown to weaken immune systems and make people more likely to succumb to infection.⁵

We strongly urge you to address this emergency by including the COVID-19 Compassion and Martha Wright Prison Phone Justice Act, which has already passed the House as part of the HEROES Act (H.R. 6800, §§ 130701-03), in the next stimulus package. Its Senate analog, the Martha Wright Reed Just and Reasonable Communications Act (S. 1764) has bipartisan support. This legislation would provide immediate and sustainable relief to families.

The legislation would enable the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to protect families from egregiously high rates by establishing the agency's jurisdiction over intrastate communications, which comprise about 80% of all calls. FCC Chairman Ajit Pai has lamented this existing gap in the law, stating in a recent letter to state regulators that he has "repeatedly expressed [his] desire to work with Congress" to fix the FCC's lack of jurisdiction to "address unreasonably and excessively high intrastate inmate calling services rates."⁶

Importantly, given the FCC's lengthy rulemaking process, the legislation would set interim rate caps at $0.04 per minute for prepaid calls and $0.05 per minute for collect calls. It would also prohibit site commissions, eliminating one factor contributing to egregious phone call rates.

Ultimately, this legislation would not only alleviate the unjust financial burden placed on families and prevent worsening health conditions, but also benefit our nation. Time and time again, studies have shown that incarcerated people who maintain contact with their families and other support networks during their incarceration are more likely to be successful upon release.⁷

We respectfully ask you to act now to protect families with incarcerated loved ones by adopting this critical piece of legislation. The cost of a call should never bar someone from ensuring their loved one is healthy, or worse yet, from comforting them if they are not.

Sincerely,
